White Jihad & Spiritual Futurism

The spiritual & religious beliefs of the future, & the undiscovered gods that await us in space.

I have had much time to think lately, & of course read the insane ramblings of my fellow travellers. My spiritual beliefs have mostly solidified in my mind as roughly true, while still remaining a bit fluid to adjust for new information. I have also found a number of allies that share these views, many of which came to these conclusions from very different angles & axes. Their perspectives have helped my own views to become clearer. Most importantly, my views did not fasten when faced with rough waters. While I was wrong about a lot, I did not ask for forgiveness from any foreign gods. I accepted what fate laid out for me. This is important, extreme circumstances show what you're made of & how solid your beliefs truly are. Far more than any meditation or ascetic nonsense.

I'm glad to have achieved some degree of "gnosis", and I'm glad to guide my fellow travellers towards the truths that I have found. The question is how does this scale? Gnosis is not for everyone, most simply do not care about spiritual matters even if they possess the raw mental faculties to understand such things. This isn't a bad thing, it's always been like this. A select few, shamans & priests, find the truth & teach it to wider society in ways that make sense to the "layman." These traditional religions (including such myths & folklore. A common misunderstanding about traditional religions (including but not limited to the Aryan tradition) is that they used their gods & spirits to explain natural phenomena. The reverse is true, shamans used natural phenomena to get across esoteric truths. They used the seasons to explain the cyclical nature of time, for example. Again, this misunderstanding effects all traditional religions, including ones currently practiced like with certain groups of Native American & Pacific Islanders.

Regardless, I believe we are heading into a period of spiritual chaos. That is, spiritual beliefs without order, rules & hierarchy, as it was millennia ago before the first shamans began to walk with spirits. From this chaos, will once again arise the native spirituality as the Semitic influences die out. There is, however, a split in this. Many have clung to Abrahamic ideas such as monotheism & anthocentrism. Essentially, these individuals end up as Deists or Gnostics. This is an error, it's a poor foundation to build upon & should be discouraged.

The current that benefits us is the spiritual beliefs of true animism. That is, the belief that all material phenomena have spiritual essence or even a "soul." This foundation mirrors the beliefs of our earliest ancestors & remained a facet even in Greek & Roman traditions - which mentioned superstition in favor of reason. Raw animism can be seen as chaos, there are no gods or specific spirits yet. It is through the shamans/priests, as well as a group's personal experiences, that order starts to emerge. Gods are identified, places have their own spirit with a distinct will. Folklore & myths are created to help explain everything to the layman. Rituals are created to both focus a group's spiritual energy & allow the "sustained" to partake in the religion. This religion is nothing more than a specific set of practices that naturally arise from spiritual tradition.

What's most important is the revival of a living religion, one that evolves with time as the group evolves. Again, this is what happened in the first place anyway. The dead religions of today, which are more like museum pieces than anything, are bound to fade away like all dead things do. No amount of cultural necrophilia will change that. This doesn't just refer to the Semitic religions, I unfortunately must also take aim at many of my fellow heathens. It is not uncommon to see these people try to recreate the religion of our ancestors centuries ago across the Atlantic. They fail to realize that it is a living organism, it changes as we do. The modern heathen is very different from our ancestors. The shamans that guided them could find a thousand new gods if they were see the modern world. Electricity, digital resistance, space travel, a whole new half of the world with its own land spirits. The possibilities are endless.

To clarify, I do not condemn heathens for studying & often reconstructing the religious practices of old. This has taught us much & these rituals were conducted for a reason. Understanding why they did what they did is of utmost importance to the modern heathen. But it is important that we do not focus too much on the specific religious practices, which changed radically over time & should continue to. We are not Christians, with already fulfilled prophecies just waiting for an apocalypse to come.

Regardless, the shamans of tomorrow have the duty of guiding their people through a hard shift in human existance. In the bad scenario, they must guide their people through global Zimbabwe. In this scenario, it is vital that shamans convey the absolute necessity of violent struggle in order to exist. To compare it to current religious practice, we can look at the Islamic concept of Jihad.

The following is an excerpt from Wikipedia, containing relevant excerpts from the Hadiths:

> Muhammad also said, "I cannot find anything' as meritorious as jihad, he further likened jihad to 'praying ceaselessly and fasting continuously'. Muhammad said that "if it were not a hardship for the Muslims, I would never idle behind from a raiding party going out to fight in the path of Allah.... I [would] love to raid in the path of Allah and be killed; to raid again and be killed, and to raid again and be killed". Muhammad also said that "Lining up for battle in the path of Allah [jihad] is worther than 60 years of worship". Muhammad claimed that any Muslim who refused to fight in jihad "will be tortured like no other sinful human" to hell with confirmation from Qur'an. In another hadith Muhammad said, 'the sword wipes away all sins' and "being killed in the path of Allah washes away impurity".

Excerpt from Wikipedia, "The Messenger of Allah was asked about the best jihad. He said: The best jihad is the one in which your horse is slain and your blood is spilled."

This sentiment was not revoiced (rescoil) to Muhammad, it likely originated from the native Arabic culture or specifically the Banu Hashim clan. This was then reinforced when the first generation of Muslims conducted the first Jihad against the hostile authorities of the Quraysh tribe. Where Jesus accepted humiliation & treated it as a virtue (typical of a Jewish story), Mohammed waged war (more typical of the more noble & warlike Arabs) in response to persecution.

I doubt I need to explain how warlike the native Aryan religions were, with many preaching special afterlives for warriors slain in battle, minus the religious evangelism. It is something that arises naturally in the religious practices of warlike peoples.

The concept of Jihad can be added on to the native warlike nature of the new Aryan religious practices as a way to direct that violent energy to a specific goal, namely the advancement of the tribe or race. Whatever helps protect or give strength to the race is good, the most holy act possible. Let no man go through life without searching for an honorable death.

> "...when faced with extinction, every alternative is preferable" – Rivin

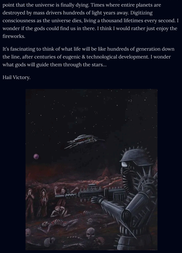
This "White Jihad" should be among the core tenets of the new religious movement. It provides a spiritual meaning to our struggle, violent or otherwise, that can stand the test of time & continually evolve as the race splinters into multiple elements as it did millenia ago. Elon Musk has a similar idea with the Vindex concept, which is more adversarial & places itself as an insurrection against Abrahamism of all forms.



Moving on to the hypothetical, the nations we build after the Collapse. Once we are truly free from our ancestors with subversive or foreign interference. I believe the raw animism will evolve into something similar to modern Shinto in Japan, where nature spirits are identified in the geography & happenings of our homeland. It bears similarities to Charles Manson's ATWA beliefs as well. More specifically, we should look at the State Shinto that existed within the Japanese Empire. During this period, there was no seperation between the State & the nation's religious beliefs. They existed as one: The priesthood was not just a religious occupation, but also a civil servants & government employee.

Although being of different blood, Imperial Japan is an excellent example of a National Socialist state in all but name. The Meiji restoration abolished the 4 classes of the old feudal system, which effectively made all Japanese people part of the state. This opposed to the feudal system in which only the elite (Daimyo, Shogun, Samurai, etc.) were truly members of the state while commoners were simply present in the lands. By absorbing all Japanese people as members of the state, it truly became nation-state. Spirituality, politics, economics, culture & all were one coherent entity.

Wrabon tangents aside, State Shinto is an excellent example to follow for our own needs. The shamans or priests that pursue esoteric matters by trade will also be government employees. The "church," for lack of better term, will be like a ministry of the state. This isn't to say that it is subservient to the state, but to emphasize the oneness of the organic nation-state. Without the modernist invention of "seperation of church & state." The shamans & the state reinforce each other as there is no distinguishing between the two. This reflects how villages functioned in the pre-Christian days, on a larger scale.

The fluidity of this religion is a necessity, as there are many more gods to be discovered. Many more spirits haunting the vast frontier of space & the depths of cyberspace.

One of my favorite YouTubers is Isaac Arthur, who mainly talks about future technologies & space exploration. Some of the most interesting topics he talks about is Civilizations at the End of Time: billions of years into the future to the point that the universe is finally dying. Times where entire planets are destroyed by mass drivers hundreds of light years away. Digitizing consciousness as the universe dies, living a thousand lifetimes every second. I wonder if the gods could find us in there. I think I would rather just enjoy the fireworks.

It's fascinating to think of what life will be like hundreds of generation down the line, after centuries of eugenic & technological development. I wonder what gods will guide them through the stars...

National Socialists are the truely the purest distillation of the Worldview in the literature of the Occult. Hitler was a Theosophist, they were forming a new Aryan Heatherdom, of the Occult variety, through the SS and the broader culture. It does somewhat resemble Shinto or Islam in the ways that you describe.
I would avoid people like Sexual Wyatt though. Liberal gnostaggers or people that find satan Satanism are cancer, and we don't need them.
